Unique new engineering and management consultancy directs and supports SMEs through complex green legislation

A unique aspect of the business is the matchless multidiscipline mix of people, business, and engineering skills

CHARTERED engineer, Barry Paschali, officially launched his new business – Paschali Engineering and Management Consulting – at the Energy Solutions Exhibition at London's Olympia last month.

The company, based in Leeds, UK, focuses on providing businesses with value adding practical sustainability advice and training in renewable energy, low carbon consulting, and existing buildings.

The UK Carbon Reduction Commitment legislation (CRC), which starts in April 2010, is just one area where they can provide direction and clear advice.

Barry Paschali, who has over a quarter of a century worth's experience in the multi-discipline world of engineering, said: "There is a real need for someone to help cut a clear path through this sustainability jungle and we pride ourselves on giving clear and impartial up-to-date training and advice."
